McCarthyism

Today we're going to talk about McCarthyism...in just a minute.

The early Cold War era was marked by heightened tensions between the US and the Soviet Union for ideological influence around the world. As the USSR tried to expand _____ globally, many Americans feared communists would infiltrate the US government and society, and the country fell into a state of _____. As the second Red Scare swept the nation, one politician in particular took advantage of increased anticommunist sentiments to advance his own political agenda—Senator Joseph McCarthy.

In 1950, McCarthy delivered a speech in which he claimed to have a list of 205 communists working in the State Department. Even though this accusation was unfounded, it effectively fueled fear and suspicion. McCarthy's methods were often considered dishonest and reckless, but he continued to accuse government officials, educators, and even people in the entertainment industry of being _____ with communists. Many careers and reputations were ruined due to these _____.

The term "McCarthyism" was coined to describe this period of witch hunting. McCarthyism reached its peak in 1954, when McCarthy accused the US Army of sympathizing with communists. The televised Army-McCarthy hearings revealed McCarthy's intimidation and guilt-by-association _____ to the public, weakening his credibility and popularity.

Later that year, McCarthy was _____ by the Senate for his conduct during his investigations, marking the end of his political career. The term McCarthyism is still used today to describe the practice of making public accusations of treason or disloyalty without sufficient evidence.

Where else in history have you seen a political leader take advantage of fear and paranoia?
